FIELDS OF INTEREST

Public Economics, Labor Economics, Health Economics

I am especially interested in how institutional design and incentive structures channel individual intentions into socially beneficial outcomes. I aim to apply these insights to labor, health, and political settings by using microeconomic theory and empirical methods to study and design institutions that enhance efficiency and welfare.

WORK IN PROGRESS

Lost in Translation or Strategic Choice? LLM Evidence on Cross-Listed Risk Disclosure Asymmetry with Siwon Lee

- Developing an LLM-based framework to compare home-country and SEC risk disclosures for U.S.-listed Asian firms
- Documenting disclosure asymmetries across matched filing pairs and mitigating cross-lingual measurement bias

Return Payments and the Ban Paradox in Asylum Policy with Prof. Robert Dur

- Developing a sequential screening model of return payments for asylum seekers
- Extending time-inconsistency frameworks to analyze how credibility constraints shape migration decisions

Optimal Taxation of E-Cigarette Products with Prof. Hans van Kippersluis

- Building a welfare-based model to determine the optimal e-cigarette excise tax for the Netherlands
- Incorporating cross-border arbitrage and estimating Dutch-specific elasticities through spatial variation analysis

Poll Weighting Effects in Intra-Party Primaries on Electoral Strategy and Outcomes with Prof. Rhee Keeyoung

- Developed a game-theoretic model for intra-party primaries, analyzing candidate positioning across configurations
- Simulated equilibria to characterize how poll weighting and constraints moderate political extremism
